Pennsylvania College Counseling Association (PACCA)

Multicultural counseling has been defined from an inclusive framework that allows deeper investigation into the complexities of cultural differences and similarities between counselor and client. This inclusive framework represents a view that all counseling is multicultural and all humans different in terms of cultural background, values, and lifestyle. Because all counseling is multicultural counseling, helping professionals should move to be more inclusive in their services.

This drive-in workshop will provide strategies for enhancing the awareness, knowledge and skills needed to address the counseling needs of culturally diverse college students. In addition, attendees will learn strategies necessary to provide culturally competent counseling services.

Keynote Speaker:

Mr. James Cox, LCSW, is the Director of the University of Pittsburgh Counseling Center. Mr. Cox's clinical interests include Multicultural Counseling, Drug and Alcohol Addiction, Brief Treatment, Religion-Spirituality and Coping, Anxiety and Depression, Couples, Family, and Relationship Issues.

Mr. Cox will discuss counseling diverse populations on college campuses and highlight the implications for college and university professionals. Additionally, Mr. Cox will incorporate his role and experiences at the University of Pittsburgh's Counseling Center and provide recommendations and strategies for professionals to incorporate the multicultural counseling competencies with diverse students on their college and university campuses.

Concurrent Break-Out Sessions:

Career Counseling with College Student-Athletes
Amy S. Cammack, Ph.D.
Associate Director, Career Counseling & Planning
Penn State University

This session will examine the career development and preparation of collegiate student-athletes. Participants will be introduced to the five factors (i.e., career decision making self-efficacy, locus of control, education/career barriers, athletic identity vs. career identity, and athletic transferable skills) of the Student-Athlete Career Situation Inventory (SACSI). Finally, implications and recommendations for practice will be provided as well as a model to utilize for enhancing the career development of college student athletes.

Counseling College Veterans
Larry Doperak
Special Populations Counselor
Community College of Allegheny College

The Montgomery GI Bill promises our college and universities a replay of the post WWII stream of GIs returning to civilian life and a better life through a college degree. College and university staff can expect an influx of OEF and OIF veterans beginning this fall. Some of these veterans, in addition to bringing a sense of discipline and maturity, will also be burdened by physical and psychiatric wounds that may affect their ability to function in the academic environment. This session will alert participants to this possibility, assist participants with being prepared to evaluate the problems that the veteran student may have and provide knowledge about resources to assist the veteran in school and in his broader world.

Counseling LGBT College Students
Peggy Lorah, D. Ed., NCC, LPC
Director, Center for Women Students
Penn State University

This session addresses the unique issues and concerns that LGBT college students present to college and university counseling centers. Participants will learn about the issues facing LGBT college students and will develop skills for working more effectively with this population.
